IT WAS hard to believe that the thing was actually happening. The Lee MacLeods, who had never been west before, thought such things only occurred in fiction. Mrs. MacLeod uttered a little suppressed scream of fright and pointed toward the stage. "Lee! They're going to hold up the stage! Oh, why did you ever insist on having the main automobile road and driving into that dreadful country?"

"Because," said Lee, "nothing exciting was happening on the main automobile road and we came west for atmosphere, didn't we?"

He tried to sound jovial, but his face was white.

Above them and to the right an old-fashioned Concord stage coach, pulled by four horses and with two men on the box, had just entered the view and was descending the slope.

Beyond to the left, a herd of horses, men, shooting and shouting, came dashed from behind the shelter of a pile of boulders and was racing madly to intercept the vehicle's progress.

Mrs. MacLeod screamed when one of the men about the stage fired toward the approaching horsemen. The driver began whipping up his horses as answering shots came from the bandits. The stage swung precariously as it veered down the slope.

Mrs. MacLeod gripped her husband's arm and gasped fiercely. "Lee!" she screamed. "We're right in the way! The stage is heading for the road and will likely be shot here!"

But Lee didn't need to be urged. He had estimated the spot where the final showdown would take place, and he was to the rear of where they were now located. His foot bore down on the accelerator and he leaped into the wheel. But speed was something to be wished for and not attained, for the road was unimproved and rutty, much more suited to slow hoofs than rubber tires.

They went bounding at what seemed a terrific pace, yet couldn't have been more than 20 miles an hour. Behind the stage, almost at their heels, came a herd of horses, men, shouting and shouting, came dashed from behind the shelter of a pile of boulders and was racing madly to intercept the vehicle's progress.

Speaks at Schools On "Safety"

J. T. Watkins, safety engineer of the state motor vehicle department, was here by special invitation last Friday and spoke to some 1700 of the county's school children on safety. At the Pamplin and local schools, pictures showing the facts of safety hazards were displayed in addition to the lecture.

FATHER Darkleajs

Column

Wherein Ye Editor Gets in a Personal Word

Like father like son, is an old saying of established truth. Yet, you'd have to get that saying into reverse to apply it to the dear shooting exploits of a local father and son. Well explain: Billy Steele went down near Petersburg two weeks ago and shot a deer. Last week his father, W. T. Steele went down and shot a deer in the same vicinity.

G. A. Shirey, of Spout Springs, had an unusual hunting experience last Thursday. He was out squirrel hunting and leveled his gun at a squirrel and fired. And believe it or not, TWO squirrels fell.

The Mingo Democrat speaks of General Robert E. Lee as a "supreme expression of the truth that the whole of a man's life somehow adds up to more than the total of its parts." And goes on to add that "Lee is a reminder that man can live in such a way that the success or failure of his material undertakings is relatively unimportant."

In a nation devoted to success stories, that is a worth remembering.

The town of Culpeper got all excited last week when Anna N. Andy came down to get "possum" hunting. Now Potridge Martin reports that Jesse James and others from West Virginia, including Jones and Edie Moore went out hunting here and got an opossum and were back in half an hour.

And clutching two tickets to the football game, Father Darkleajs and Mother Brightleajs felt themselves to be celebrating the program with a third anniversary of a wedding that has brought, so far, plenty of "Hitters" to our star line.

Two boys from Rathburg played basketball and Concord chapters of the Future Farmers of America organized a game of basketball.

Other bands, stocks and securities were sold at a public sale on Thursday. A student of the Rutherford chapter of the Future Farmers of America, followed by William Moon of Appomattox who gave a history of the F. F. A. organization, and the Hub Federation.

The program was closed by a piano selection by James T. Jones, of the Rutherford chapter, and the announcer for the entire program.
